

Radio Script delivered by Bob Brenna's Daughter:

When my grandfather began practicing law over fifty years ago, he was proud to be a member of the only profession standing between the power of the government and the freedom all of us enjoy but often take for granted. When my father began practicing law twenty five years ago, he was proud to stand at my grandfather's side. Proud to be counted as another member of our family that people could turn to in their darkest hours. Dad has always told me that being a lawyer is about more than making a living. It's about everyone getting fair and honest representation in a court of law regardless of their station in life. It's about doing what is right and just and always being truthful. I don't think it's right that some lawyers have equated the practice of law to nothing but money. I don't think it's justice that drives some lawyers to run ads that emphasize money so much, that they'd have us believe that truth and justice are nothing more than convenient by-products. My grandfather always said there is no more honorable a profession than the practice of law. And from what I've seen, that's the way it should be
