

Here's a salute to the everyday people.

The one's who contribute to our lives without expecting fame or glory.

The one's who teach our children, and especially the one's who give so much more teaching them by example about trust and decency.

Like the people who lead the high school musicians in the holiday concerts, fix our roads, serve in law enforcement, or the military.

Here's to the everyday people who get up every morning whether they like it or not. Who do what's expected of them day in and day out and make our country great.

Here's to the one's who care, who do what's right, even though they're just getting by. Who don't complain while athletes get multi million dollar salaries. The one's who make the effort to make our world just a little bit better.

This is Bob Brenna Jr. from the law firm of Brenna and Brenna, asking you to take time out of your day the next time you get a chance, to make their day a little better by saying thanks.
